Like swimming and riding a bicycle, knowing how to drive a motor vehicle has also become a life skill these days. The Motor Vehicle Act of 1988 states that a citizen cannot drive a motor vehicle in a public road without holding a valid driving licence. But what if you are just beginning to learn the basics of driving a car or a two wheeler? Beginners must hold a valid Learner's License (LLR) in India to practice driving motor vehicles on roads provided they are supervised by a permanent driving license holder.

To be able to legally drive a vehicle on Indian roads, you must hold a valid Driving License. The first step to obtaining a Driving License in India is getting a Learner's License. A Learner's License is a document issued by the respective state Regional Transport Office (RTO) and Regional Transport Authority (RTA) and acts as a provisional & restricted License. One must be familiar with road sense and rules to get a Learner's license. In India, Learner's license is issued to the candidate after he passes a written or online test that will test his knowledge on road rules. After you get a Learner's license, you will be allowed to practice driving on public roads provided that you are accompanied by a person who holds a permanent Driving License. You must obtain a Learner's license for the pertinent class of vehicle before you can get a Driving License.

Each region and state in India has its own RTO or RTA office in all major cities from where you can get your Learner's License. Also, many state RTOs now have their own online portal in which you can apply for a Learner's License without any hassles right from the comfort of your home. With all applications forms for Learner's License readily available online and websites offering mock Learner's License tests, getting a LLR has become a cake walk.

Driving License and Learner's License in India are awarded based on the class of motor vehicle. Depending on the class of the vehicle, the eligibility criteria also vary.

Depending on the class of motor vehicle and the type of learner's license sought for, the eligibility criteria for Learning License differs. The eligibility conditions for various types of Learner's License offered in India is given below.

Type of Learner's License	Eligibility Criteria
Motorcycles with gear	The candidate must be aged at least 18 years.

Type of Learner's License	Eligibility Criteria
Motorcycles without gear with up to 50 cc capacity	The candidate must be aged at least 16 years. For candidates less than 18 years of age, the consent from guardian or parent must be obtained.
General Requirement for obtaining a Learner's License	The Learner's License applicant must be fluent with traffic rules & regulations. The applicant must have valid address proof and age proof documents.
Commercial Heavy Vehicles and Transport Vehicles	The applicant must have finished 8th standard of schooling. The applicant must be at least 18 years old. In some states, the minimum age requirement is 20 years.

Here are some of the reasons as to why you need a Learner's Licence in India.

- To learn driving a motor vehicle, you must first get a Learner's Licence for that class of vehicle. A Learner's Licence legally allows you to learn driving with an experienced instructor or driver on Indian roads.
- If you hold a valid Learner's License, you can practise driving with a permanent Driving Licence holder. This will help you polish your driving skills before you take your vehicle out.
- Getting a Driving Licence is a precursor to getting a Driving Licence. It is easy to apply and get a permanent Driving License if you hold a valid Learner's Licence.
- Holding a Learner's Licence and practising on roads will help you get familiarized with road rules which will in turn help you when you are driving.

Tirumala Engineering College understands the importance and need of driving license for the students who are using the vehicles and arranged a Mege LLR Mela in TEC Campus. As a primary step in this process, TEC arranged Mega LLR mela in October 2018 and followed by a Drivining License Program after successful attainment of the Learner's License.
